RISK VS GAIN

Being a relatively new and largely unregulated market, investment into digital currency and blockchain projects is classified as a risk investment. While CHAINWAYS has a proven track record and demonstrated high capability for trading and investing in digital currency, this is by no means a guarantee for future performance. However, the conservative approach of keeping funds in reserve to balance out effects of a single unsuccessful trade reduces risk significantly.

Swing Trading

Day Trading

Swing trading is a trading strategy that involves trying to capture price moves that happen on a short to medium time frame. The idea behind swing trading is to catch market "swings" that play out over a few days to several weeks. Swing traders primarily use technical analysis to look for trading opportunities, but may also utilize fundamental analysis in addition to analyzing price trends and patterns.

There are two swings that investors generally look out for:

- Swing highs – When the market peaks before pulling back, providing an opportunity for a short trade
- Swing lows – When the market dips and bounces, providing an opportunity for a long trade

Swing trading strategies work well with trending markets, including forex, stocks, and cryptocurrencies.

The best crypto coins for swing trading include Bitcoin, Ethereum and Tether. This is because they have the largest market capitalization and are some of the most actively traded and volatile coins on the market.

Swing trading can be an excellent strategy, not as demanding as other crypto investing strategies. In addition, there are other benefits:

- Longer term strategy
- Lower intensity
- Volatility

(Due to the nature of swing trading cryptos such as Bitcoin, volatility is key. The cryptocurrency market is highly volatile, which can be lead to substantial profits.)

Day trading is one of the most commonly used trading strategies. Day trading is a trading strategy that involves entering and exiting positions on the same trading day. Since the trading happens within the same day, this strategy may also be referred to as intraday trading.

Day trading involves speculating on the price of assets, such as stocks, forex or cryptos, within a single trading day. Traders open and close multiple positions in a session to generate profits from short-term market movements. Importantly, no positions are held overnight.

Day trading is a commonly used trading strategy in stock trading just as well in cryptocurrency

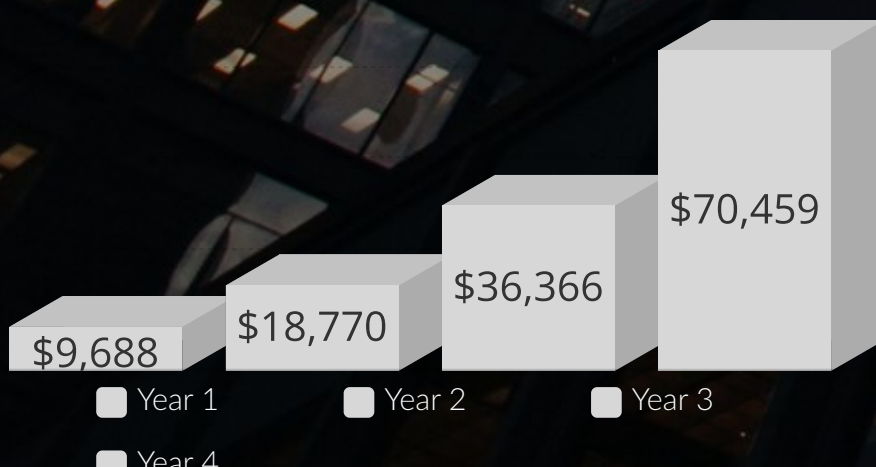

Day trading uses numerous intraday strategies such as:

- Scalping: This strategy involves taking advantage of small price moves that happen on short time frames.
- Range trading: This strategy uses pre-determined support and resistance levels in prices to determine the trader's buy and sell decisions.
- News-based trading: This strategy seizes trading opportunities from the heightened volatility that occurs around news events.
- High-frequency trading (HTF): These strategies use sophisticated algorithms to exploit small or short-term market inefficiencies.

Swing trading and day trading may seem like similar practices, but the major differences between the two have a common theme: time.
